To Whom It May Concern:

I write this letter of recommendation for Dr. David Wexler with great pleasure because Dr. Wexler is, without a doubt, one of the most superlative physicians I have worked with in my entire medical career. In my role as a clinical and interventional cardiologist, I have often had patients who needed the additional psychiatric, professional expertise that Dr. Wexler provides. Thus, we have shared many patients over more than a decade of collaboration; his clinical expertise has proven itself again and again to the great benefit of those patients I have referred

Over the years of our professional relationship, I have been immensely impressed by Dr. Wexler's medical acumen and his unique ability to take exceedingly complicated patients and drill down to the fine granular detail to find a successful, medical, treatment paradigm. His excellent academic background and top tier medical training no doubt set a solid foundation for his medical career, but his innate curiosity, detailed clinical observation, and research puts him in the highest regards among his peers. He is recognized as one of the foremost experts in psychopharmacology on the West Coast as well as a national thought leader.

Dr. Wexler's keen diagnostic and treatment skills are only exceeded by his tremendous compassion and empathy for his patients. He is the ultimate physician to whom you send your loved one. He is revered by his patients, who comprise a very prestigious group in the Silicon Valley, for his impeccable integrity and graciousness.

It is without any hesitation or qualification that I strongly recommend Dr. Wexler to fulfill your professional needs.

Respectfully,

RE: WEXLER, DAVID BRIAN

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing this letter in support of Dr. David Brian Wexler's application to your institution. I am a board certified neurologist working in a multispecialty private practice with the Palo Alto Medical Foundation. In addition, I have a clinical appointment with Stanford University. I am also board certified in electrodiagnostic medicine and otherwise practice general neurology with special interests in headache and dementia.

I have worked with Dr. Wexler for many years and we share multiple patients between our practices. Without exception, I find Dr. Wexler to be the finest psychiatrist with which I have ever been associated. He maintains a high standard of clinical practice and is well versed in current concepts relating to neuroscience, particularly as it relates to his specific field of expertise. For this and other reasons, he is highly regarded by his colleagues and patients. In my view, clinical acumen is unparalleled, and in part this is augmented by his genuine regard for his patients, and his excellent demeanor and bedside manner. He is unusually accessible to patients and clinicians, which is ironically a quality hard to find among other psychiatrist within our medical community. I find that he has useful insights into patients' problems and how such issues impact on patients' neurologic care. He is always responsive to my suggestions and recommendations, and collaborating with him has been a true pleasure. When I have a patient for whom I am seeking excellent psychiatric care, Dr. Wexler is always at the top of my list of referral recommendations. My only concern in recommending him so highly is that we may lose him from our community, and this would be a true loss to my clinical practice.

Sincerely,

Ealon Joelson, MD

To Whom It May Concern:

It is my distinct pleasure to provide a letter in support of Dr. David Wexler. I have had the distinct pleasure of knowing Dr. Wexler for over 20 years. I have known him personally and by reputation, and have shared many patients with him over the years.

Dr. Wexler has been in Private Practice as a Psychiatrist since 2000. He has also been a past Clinical Instructor in the Stanford University School of Medicine, Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences.

Dr. Wexler has a solid, stellar reputation among peers, colleagues, and patients in the community. He has been a consistent role model for trainees and colleagues alike. He has always been very dedicated to his work. His dedication and commitment to his patients and the community are second to none, and he has keen, professional clinical acumen. Patients uniformly praise his clinical acumen, and superb bedside manner.

At the same time, Dr. Wexler is a warm and giving individual. His high moral character and focused drive have let to clinical endeavors of the highest merit. His clinical judgment and productivity, communication skills with subordinates, peers and supervisors and his amazing professional humanism are just a small part of why I support Dr. Wexler with the highest degree of enthusiasm and without reservation.

Sincerely,

Natalie Rasgon, M.D., Ph. D.

To Whom It May Concern

I am writing this letter in support of bringing Dr. David B. Wexler into your healthcare group. I am a primary care provider, i.e. general practitioner, at the Menlo Medical Clinic in Menlo Park, California and have shared patients with David for four years now. While we both have affiliations through Stanford University Hospital and Clinics, we were introduced by our patients. We quickly came to respect each other's practice style and high level of competency and have been regularly referring patients to each other ever since. He has been very welcoming and in fact had me for lunch at his office to introduce me to his partners and staff.

Dr. Wexler is known throughout the community to be one of the most outstanding psychopharmacologists in the area. His patients adore him, and as long as I have known him there has been a waiting list to become part of his practice. When I refer patients to a psychiatrist, and give them a list of names but emphatically tell them that Dr. Wexler is my first choice. Furthermore, I have told my own friends and colleagues, "If anything should ever happen to me, get me to Dr. David Wexler." My experience is that David is always up to date on the latest medical literature and new pharmacologic releases. His commitment to continued learning even extends beyond medicine, as he is generally always taking an evening class (for example in the Mandarin language).

I have a very high percentage of patients with diagnosis of mental illness. This is intimidating for most internists, but as long as my patients have Dr. Wexler caring for them then it is truly no worry for me.

I encourage you not to miss a very good opportunity in working with and learning from Dr. Wexler.

Sincerely

Rachel Seaman MD
